

REMARKS

Many fires are started in backyards, campgrounds, etc. by not properly using charcoal in a pit enclosure for the purpose of cooking foods. When you are finished cooking with charcoal, you have to wait a long period of time before the charcoals are cool enough to be removed from the pit enclosure. Many people dump the charcoals on the ground when finished cooking, sometimes causing a fire. The only way to completely put the charcoal out is to soak them in water. Sometimes the charcoal will start burning again if they are not soaked in water the proper way. Most people are in a hurry when finished cooking and dump the charcoals on the ground to go out. Fires are very common in backyards and campgrounds when using charcoal for cooking.

You also have your commercial pit that cannot be cleaned. The only way the pit can be used daily is to remove most of the ashes from the firebox and start your next cooking on the grease and ash that cannot be removed. Most commercial pits are built with firebricks, not a charcoal rack, and cannot be removed. With the buildup of grease and charcoal ash mixed together, a serious fire can start which is hard to extinguish, sometimes even burning the building down. Thus, the importance of having a removable firebox in a commercial food business.
